

To Whomever It May Concern,

Madison is a natural leader and an excellent communicator. She understands the value of experience and advice from people who have walked the path before her, which has given her a maturity and sophistication rarely seen at the college level. She's not afraid to receive and constructively give feedback and always has a positive attitude no matter the situation. Madison is ready for anything the film/video world throws at her and will face any new challenges with a creative and positive spirit.

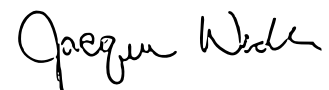

With all aspects of any artistic field, there is always growth to be had. However, there is little that Madison can't do when she puts her mind to it, so I'm excited to watch her continue to improve her directing, editing, and overall creativity as she grows into a successful professional in this field.

Madison has achieved so much already at such a young age, from the various productions she's worked on to her professional internships. I think this opportunity would expand her mind, creativity, and skillsets to a whole new level and she would return ready to take on new challenges and be the leader she aspires to be.

I've known Madison her whole life, and as a mentor and a friend, it's been such an honor to help her grow as a person and director ever since she decided to attend my alma mater, Columbia. She's incredibly ambitious, and will be a critical piece to any production or project she's part of. I'm looking forward to hearing about her new experiences and adventures!

Sincerely,

Jacqui Wedewer
